Instructions

1. This is the gross taxable income you currently have available, which is referred to in the Royal Decree of 1 April 2007. As to professional income and replacement income (pension, early retirement, annuity, benefit, allowance, tideover allowance, etc.), the amounts relating to the month of the declaration, multiplied by 12, plus the amount of any other related benefits (holiday pay, welfare benefits, etc.) are taken into consideration. However, student work income is exempt from taxation, provided that the relevant child received child benefits in the year preceding the year of filing the Declaration on Honour (only the proof of payment for the month of December of this year). As to the professional income of self-employed individuals, the difference between gross profits or profits and professional charges is multiplied by 100/80.
2. a) Certain documents only mention net amounts: these are the gross taxable amounts to be declared. b) When you receive different pensions or annuities, the gross taxable amounts should be specified separately.
3. You have to specify the non-indexed cadastral income. The health insurance provider will apply the indexation.
4. This document must be signed personally by the person filing the declaration (from 18 years of age) or by his or her legal representative (under 18 years of age). The signature of the person filing the declaration must be preceded by the words "Read and approved" when he or she has not completed the declaration himself or herself.
5. If the members of a household are registered with different health insurance providers, a single health insurance provider is responsible for examining whether the household meets the income requirements and therefore has to receive information relating to all members of the household.
